

PWA APPROVES DALY CITY SCHOOL BOND LOAN

RECEIVE WORD GOVERNMENT UNDERWRITE OBLIGATIONS

Tentative Plans Submitted
And Passed on by Public Works Administration at Washington Last Week

NOW UP TO ELECTORS

Word was received in Daly City last Friday evening that the PWA, of the Department of the Interior, had approved a loan of $105,000 for the construction of the new buildings of the Jefferson School, the Vista Grande School and the Crocker School as proposed by the Board of Trustees of the Jefferson School District.

This loan, as well as an outright grant by the government of approximately 25 per cent of the total sum, is contingent upon the approval by the electors of the district of a bond issue for the above named amount. These bonds will be voted on at a date to be set in the near future by the school board.

When the bonds have been approved by the voters they will be underwritten by the government for the full amount. However, the school district will only be asked to repay the balance remaining after the outright government grant has been subtracted from the original sum covered by the bond issue.

The Jefferson school is said to be in the neighborhood of thirty or more years old, while the Vista Grande and Crocker schools were erected about twenty-four years ago.

The school board had secured the services of architects to draw tentative plans and make estimates on the cost or construction of the three proposed school buildings. It was estimated the combined cost would be about $103,000, leaving $2,000 for incidentals, which will undoubtedly become a factor before construction is completed.

These tentative plans and estimates as given by the architects were forwarded to the Public Works Administration at Washington some time ago. After survey and investigation, the approval was given.

Following is a letter received by W. J. Sweeney, clerk of the board, and is self explanatory:

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC WORKS

State Engineer, 306 State Building, Los Angeles, Calif., July 20, 1934.
Mr. William J. Sweeney,
344 Santa Barbara Ave.,
Daly City, California.

Dear Sir:

Please be advised that we have this day received notice of loan and grant allocation covering the following:

Docket No. 6585—Daly City Jefferson School, School Building, $105,000, loan and grant.

Please accept congratulations and expedite the preparation of plans, specifications and all other documents and papers necessary to secure the approval of the State Engineer, and permit, and start construction at the earliest possible date.

Kindly contact PWA office in the State Building, San Francisco, and follow up all details through Mr. Wilder, my assistant.

Sincerely yours,
F. E. TRASK,
State Engineer, PWA.

The school board is composed of G. R. Augustine, chairman; W. J. Sweeney, clerk; Louis Nava, and R. L. Crane Jr., superintendent of elementary schools, who acts as secretary.

Approval of the proposed bond issue will require the affirmative votes of two thirds of the legal electors in the district.

It is proposed the buildings be of cement-stucco construction.

Suggestion has been made that the drawings of the tentative plans be displayed in windows of business houses in several conspicuous places in the city, so the same may be viewed by residents at their convenience.

Solid Front! Forward!

Communities are built up by progressive effort of its citizenry. Each one should do his or her part in the forward movement.

Lend a helping hand whenever possible!

We all want our city to prosper! Then boost—don't knock!

REDEMPTION BID RECEIVED FOR COUNTY BONDS

Board Considers Protests on This and That Affecting Various Residents

An offer was made to the Board of Supervisors at its regular meeting Monday by the firm of Crowell and Wheedon of Los Angeles, through its representatives to assume the County's 1915 improvement bond delinquencies on a redemption basis. This property, it is stated, if accepted would save the county $12,000 on principal and interest.

The proposal is to assume the bonded indebtedness at a flat rate of 90 cents on the dollar. The present interest rate on the indebtedness is 7 per cent and the company, through Travers, stated last week that it could effect a saving of 3 per cent.

Upon suggestion of the board chairman the matter was referred to the district attorney and the county auditor, who will devise a means of handling the issue.

The indebtedness accrued from the 1915 obligations. A court decision in the Lakeport case holds that all cities and counties are responsible for the improvement bond delinquencies to the extent of an additional 10c per $100 valuation within the various improvement districts.

The question of further limiting the lights within the Montara lighting district came before the board for discussion and action with the appearance of Attorney W. H. Morrissey, representing a number of property owners in the district.

Morrissey asked the board to exercise its power in reducing the number of lights within the area in order to effect an assessment reduction for his clients.

The protestors affected request the number of lights be cut from the contracted "not less than 101" to not more than 49.

The matter was referred to representatives of the P. G. and E., who said they would "look kindly toward effecting a satisfactory settlement of the controversy."

Protests on diversion of the county's gasoline tax refund to the incorporated towns and city of the county, tentatively voted to the extent of $41,000 by the board at a recent meeting, were entered by the Selby Social club of Redwood City and the North Fair Oaks Improvement club.

Allocation of the funds to the cities, to be used for street maintenance has been fought bitterly by Engineer James.

A hearing on this matter was postponed until next Monday at last week's meeting.

Dr. C. V. Thompson, chairman of the board, announced before the beginning of the meeting that the first hearing on the formation of the 1934-35 fiscal year budget would be conducted at the court house on Friday, August 10, when the County Engineer's letter was read, recommending inclusion of the Haskin Hill road into the county's highway system as a fourth class road, Supervisor Witt strenuously objected and hinted that "James was always trying to slip something over on the board."

The engineer vigorously denied the allegation of the supervisor and stated that "he" was only recommending inclusion, not asking it."

A motion to ask for bids for rental of a steam shovel for the use of the county on the La Honda road project, upon which work for 66 relief jobless has been delayed, was passed by the board. Engineer James had recommended purchase of a small shovel for a price not to exceed $8000. Witt opposed the recommendation and

WITT RECALL PAPERS "SNATCHED BACK"

The petitions filed last week in the Supervisor Al Witt recall movement were withdrawn the next day, Friday of last week, in a dramatic fashion.

While the sponsors stated the only reason for the withdrawal was because it was desired to file more sections when completed, the rumor gained currency that the decision might have been inspired by other and more cogent reasons.

However, there is further action promised by the attorney for Supervisor Witt, and there is much mysterious silence on the part of those who filed the petitions.

We shall see what we shall see—later on.

ANOTHER LEMON MINING PROPERTY TURNS OUT TO BE WONDER OF WORLD

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

First hand information about the remarkable expansion of mining in the northern country is brought to Daly City by J. L. McKay, well known mining expert of Vancouver, who is getting much enjoyment out of a visit to our municipality. Of a conservative temperament, the visitor cannot help but wax enthusiastic about the big doings up North. Millions of dollars have been realized from both precious and base metals in the sections with which McKay is familiar and immense productions are confidently expected for the future.

"As much as $480,000,000 worth of ore taken out of the Sullivan mine in East Kootenay, British Columbia," said the expert in discussing an especially rich section. "The Sullivan has been for many years responsible for over 90 per cent of all the lead produced by Canada."

The Sullivan is the greatest mine of its kind in the world. It is a seemingly inexhaustible deposit of silver-lead-zinc ore that it is estimated will last several generations at a daily production rate of 5,000 tons.

The mine has a wonderful history. It was sold about twenty three years ago by an American smelting company to a Canadian smelting company as a "lemon." The property was secured through the purchase of a defaulted bond issue aggregating $200,000.

The original Sullivan group was located by a party of four prospectors from Idaho. Their way lay through a precipitous country of dense timber and underbrush. Later the property was purchased by Spokane men for $25,000 and subsequently the ownership changed a number of times. Only when the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company acquired the mine, was a successful process for the treatment of the ore found. The strangest part of the Sullivan history is that the American Smelting and Refining Company, the largest concern of its kind in the world, did not realize its potential value and let it go.

When it comes to gold, East Kootenay is very much to the fore, too.

"More gold has come out of the East Kootenay than the Cariboo," said McKay. "The Cariboo has been more highly publicized, that's all."

It would be hard to find any more promising territory for the miner than that same East Kootenay. About 2,000 men are engaged in placer operations in the area right now.

It is estimated 4,500 men, exclusive of those working in the coal mines, are occupied in East and West Kootenay, in the output of metals.

The Monarch, owned by the Base Metals Mining Corporation, is a typical mine in the Kootenay district. It is one of the lowest cost mines of its kind in the world. On a three shift basis, employing one hundred men, handling close to 350 tons daily in a plant of rated 300-ton capacity, mining, milling, and development costs have been brought down to $2.56 per ton of mine-run ore.

The mine-run product averages 12 per cent lead, and from 16 to 17 per cent zinc, with two ounces of silver to the ton. The resultant lead concentrate is averaging 81 per cent lead and twelve ounces of silver; and the zinc concentrate 61 per cent zinc and two ounces of silver. Milling recovery is about 97 per cent for lead and from 86 to 87 per cent zinc, comparing favorably with that of any other plant in the world.

GOLD MECCA OF THE FAR NORTH IS RELOCATED

Weird Story Comes Out of Nahanni River District,
Which May Soon Be
Rival of Klondike

With all the trimmings of romance, skeletons of murdered prospectors and a lost mine finally relocated through a thirty-year-old map—Nahanni River is now the gold mecca of the Far North, perhaps to rival Klondike. Thus writes Sidney Norman in a comprehensive article in the Vancouver Sun.

It is a weird story that comes out of that far country, far more intriguing than penny fiction, but it may eventually lead to riches and happiness, for some, deprivation, hardships and misery for many. But, weal or woe, the vanguard is on its way to the wilderness of the great Mackenzie River reaches.

The story goes like this. Thirty years ago two prospectors, William and Frank McLeod, reached Fort Liard with a sample of placer gold, panned near the headquarters of the Nahanni River, where they had been trapping that winter.

Gold Harvest Lost

Coming through the rapids of the Nahanni their outfit had been swamped and all the gold they had panned was lost, with the exception of one small bottle.

They re-outfitted at Liard and returned to the diggings in the fall. When nothing had been heard of them for over a year an unsuccessful search was made for their cabin.

Finally, after three years, their skeletons were found, each with a bullet hole in the skull. Investigation failed to discover who was responsible for their deaths, but it was finally attributed to the "bad Indians" who, according to the Nahanni Indians, who inhabited the country around the head of the Nahanni. No white man ever saw these "bad Indians," but their existence was very real to the other natives.

Few whites were in the Country at that time and they were fully equipped with fur-trading, in which fortunes were easily made. None were sufficiently interested in gold to investigate the McLeod diggings.

Fades Into Legend

Gradually, the story became a

BASEBALL TEAM OF CITY THEATER WINS FIFTH GAME

Seems Impossible for Home
Boys to Be Headed Off
By Their Opponents

The Daly City Theater baseball team won its fifth straight game at Ocean View Park, Sunday.

They defeated the fast stepping D'Artagan club by a score of 3 to 2 in a very exciting contest.

The game developed into a pitchers' battle between Charlie Sheridan of the theater boys and Michael Morse of the losing club.

The theater boys bunched their hits in the fifth inning, when they scored all their runs.

Sheridan allowed his opponents five hits and struck out ten hitters, while Morse was nicked for but four blows and struck out eight batters.

Conforti was the star of the day at bat, collecting two hits.

LOCAL YOUTH WILL PLAY IN NATIONAL GOLF LINKS TRIALS

Melvin Kennedy of Mission street and three other golfers will depart next Sunday evening by train for Pittsburgh, Pa. On arrival there they will enter as participants in the national Public Links Championship match, soon to be held in that city.

The team of four is managed by Clare Kemp.

The match play is scheduled to be held from July 30 to August 4.

WANT LOCAL MEN ON HETCH HETCHY JOB

The San Mateo Chamber of Commerce has taken action to secure employment for San Mateo county jobless men on that portion of the Hetch Hetchy pipe line which traverses the county.

It is reported that men have been sent from the federal office in San Francisco to work on the pipe line in this county. The Chamber of Commerce, in a letter sent to the headquarters in Los Angeles, reaffirms the contention of the city officials that this is in violation of the PWA regulations.

Daughters of Utah Pioneers Have Outing

The Daughters of Utah Pioneers' Camp Minnie Jeppesen and their friends and the San Francisco County Camp joined in an outing at Golden Gate Park on Tuesday of this week.

An interesting program was put on before luncheon.

The afternoon was spent in playing games and conversing with old friends who gathered at this annual outing.

Daly City was well represented.

Sport Dance

The Daly City Theater baseball team is arranging a sport dance for Saturday evening at the Daly City Hall.

The proceeds of this affair will be used to outfit the team members.

Music will be furnished by Ray Morton's Rhythm Kings. It is hoped large numbers will attend.

CITY FATHERS AND MEMBERS P. T. A. TALK OF PLAYGROUNDS

Many Valuable Opinions
Are Offered at City Hall Assembly

The members of the City Council met last Friday evening at the City Hall with a large number of members the various P. T. A. units of the city and the Daly City Woman's Civic Club and other interested citizens.

The meeting was called for the purpose of devising ways and means of securing a sum monthly sufficient to pay for supervising play of children on the elementary school grounds on Saturdays and holidays and during the vacation periods.

Many valuable suggestions were offered and the ideas expressed will, no doubt, result in some satisfactory solution of the problem.

The suggestions ran the gamut from an outright appropriation by the city council to raising the needed sum by private subscriptions or by holding neater parties and giving other entertainments and seeking the patronage of the public.

Plan Received With Approval

The most feasible suggestion was one proposing that the council, by ordinance, create a Recreation Commission of five and that the members of this commission be reimbursed for their services in the sum of $10 per month each. The commission, it was stated, should be composed of two persons acting as recreation chairmen of the four Parent-Teacher Association units and of the Daly City Woman's Civic Club. These, in turn, it was said, could donate the sum paid them for salaries for the purpose of paying the teachers employed for supervising play on the days mentioned. This plan seemed to meet with the approval of the majority of those present, and, if it is found that the step can be legally taken, is the one most probable of adoption.

The need is great and it is believed some means will be found to bring about supervised play for the children on the school grounds on the days stated, and that at some future time playgrounds will be established by the city of a permanent nature. Realizing that the children of today will become the citizens who must "carry on" in civic and social activities in later years, it is imperative that their environment and condition of recreation should be carefully safeguarded by each and every member of the community of today.

Another meeting will be held this (Friday) evening, July 27, at the same place and time to discuss further plans and it is urged that all citizens interested in the welfare of our children attend and help with their suggestions to secure fruition of this worthy project.

DALY CITY POLICE CAR ON THE AIR

One of our police cars has recently been fitted out with a radio. The calls of the Daly City car, which is officially designated at Daly City Car No. 401, will be operated in conjunction with San Francisco police broadcasting station.

The fitting of this car for radio service brings the local department up to modern standards of communication used by the leading police departments of the state.

Messages may be relayed by local patrol officers whose district is within radius where complaint is made, thus enabling them to give much more efficient service.

Will Hold Bridge-Whist

San Mateo Council, American Legion Auxiliary, is giving a monster card party at Redwood City Veterans Hall, this evening (Friday), July 27, for the benefit of the drill team uniform fund. Members of Daly City Unit No. 410 are assisting Mrs. Mae Wright, chairman, together with committees from the other San Mateo County units, to make the affair a success. Bridge and whist will be conducted separately, with attractive prizes for high scores.

Ten members of the drill team, which will participate in the state convention in San Francisco, August 13-14-15, are members of Daly City Unit No. 410.

FORMATION OF PLANS OF YEAR NOW COMPLETE

"Soldier, You Can't Stand There—Move Forward" Is Motto For 1934-35

(Fred R. Linser, Publicity Chmn.)

Now that the encampment, concluded on June 28, is over, and all delegates have returned to their homes, work has begun in earnest to plan for a very active year in the ranks of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

It is interesting to note the many important resolutions passed by the late encampment. For the information of the public we herewith give a brief resume of these resolutions:

Resolution No. 29: This dealt with the opposition to communism and all other "isms" that have a tendency to undermine our government structure.

Resolution No. 38: A full pardon was sanctioned in behalf of the great Confederate leader, Robert E. Lee. This has been the endeavor of accomplishment for several years, and it is gratifying to note the generosity and co-ordination at this time. This is significant of the V. F. W.

Resolution No. 21: It is stated in no uncertain terms that the V. F. W. does not approve of any world court, or of the United States aligning itself with any foreign country.

Resolution No. 42: The governor of California was requested to call a special session of the Legislature to enact laws extending the present moratorium on foreclosures on homes and farms.

Resolution No. 4: It was definitely opposed to increasing the present quota of immigration. Let's Americanize those here before bringing in any more.

Resolution No. 8: Due to the subject of flag etiquette being omitted from our present school curriculum, it was recommended that the subject of flag etiquette be again included in our schools.

So much for the resolutions. They will be further dealt with next week.

One of the outstanding principles of the Veterans of Foreign Wars is that of the civic duties of its members. Much about this has been said in the past and one may be sure more will be said in the future. The Veterans of Foreign Wars are going ahead steadily. The motto for 1934-35 is, "Soldier, you can't stand there, move forward."

Old Glory Post No. 2044 was very well represented at the Legion picnic held Sunday, July 15. The return games will be played in Daly City on Sunday next, and should be of great interest to the members of both organizations. Fireworks will be the order of the day. We have two legs on the trophy and it will be a very appropriate fellow for the Department Efficiency Trophy, which was won by this post this year.

Saturday, August 18, will see the return of the regular monthly dances in Eagles Hall. Our opening dance has been billed as Politicians' Night. Come out and dance and laugh and meet the men you will be asked to elect to office. Speeches will not be the order of the day. We are going there to dance. There will be plenty of that diversion.

Injured By Truck

Vincent Bona, 55, 124 Teddy avenue, San Francisco, suffered a fractured shoulder when struck by a truck driven by Arnold Roloff, 33 of Moltke street, this city. Roloff was said to have reported that Bona, who is employed as a Municipal Railway conductor, stepped from behind a parked automobile to board a street car, and that the driver did not see him in time to bring his truck to a stop.

GOLD MECCA OF FAR NORTH RELOCATED

legend, but as more white men came in and fur-trading profits dwindled, interest in the story revived. Very few facts remained, however. Those who had knowledge of the circumstances had died or disappeared.

In 1928, North American Mines Exploration Co., Jack Hammel's air prospecting outfit, operated two planes all summer looking for the McLeod diggings and carrying on general exploration, but nothing came of the effort.

At about the same time, a white man named Hall went into the district and nothing has been heard of him till this day. In 1931 another white man, Phil Powers, tried his luck in the hoodooed territory and built his cabin within thirty miles of the McLeod diggings.

More Tragedy

When he failed to return to re-outfit in the spring of 1932, the R.C.M.P. sent in a patrol, which found the cabin burned to the ground and in the ashes a badly charred human skeleton. While it was impossible to establish identification, it is presumed the remains were those of Powers.

In the spring of 1933, two prospectors, Jack Stanier and Billy Clark, were talking over the McLeod story with a priest at Fort Liard, who told them that he had seen a map of the Nahanni drawn by William McLeod. He drew a copy from memory, but could not locate the diggings within ten miles.

Armed with this primitive map, the prospectors went to Fort Simpson in an effort to raise a grub-stake. While there they met another priest, who had been in Liard when the McLeod boys were there and who subsequently produced the original map, with the spot marked "X," showing exact location of the diggings.

That brought the necessary backing and a Mackenzie Airways plane was chartered to take them in. Straight they went to the creek, where McLeod's rusting shovels and rotting sluice boxes gave mute evidence of success and tragedy.

Late in September the prospectors returned to Fort Simpson by plane and recorded on the gold diggings, naming the creek after the McLeods.

A small bottle of coarse gold which they had panned provided some evidence of gold occurrence, but water seepage had prevented digging to bedrock and there was no telling how rich the ground might be. Clarke returned to Liard for the winter and Stainer went to Edmonton to raise more capital.

Stampede Begins

Directly the news came out at Fort Simpson, the stampede was on. Four natives went by canoe and outboard motor up the Liard and Nahanni rivers and staked alongside the original claims.

The ice was then running in the Nahanni and they were forced to return in a hurry. They had time, however, to look around and reported bars of black sand from which colors could be panned.

Since then many natives and special plane parties of prospectors have reached the district, including one of six men, led by Stainer, in charge of an engineer representing a firm which had optioned the original claims. The party expected to get down to bedrock by thawing through the gravel.

That's the story of Nahanni fairly close up to date. The ice doesn't leave the lakes till July in that northern clime, so news will come slowly to the outside. So far, no one knows whether or not a major placer find has been made.

Vast Virgin Area

Staking up till the last time the last news left the country had been confined to the immediate area, but the possible gold-bearing territory is immense. It lies on the Northwest Territories side of the watershed between the Territories and the Yukon

Injured on Street Car

George Quessy, employed as a guard for a San Francisco bank, who resides on Irvington street, Daly City, was struck over the eye by a missile which crashed through the window of a southbound No. 18 car on which he was a passenger, at Mission and Twenty-second streets, late last Saturday afternoon.

Police were first inclined to the belief that the victim had been shot, but this proved erroneous. Examination of the wound by a surgeon revealed that it had probably been inflicted by a missile propelled from a slingshot.

A number of street car windows were broken by rocks and other missiles hurled in various sections of the city that day.

The injury proved not to be serious.

Fire Chief Recovering

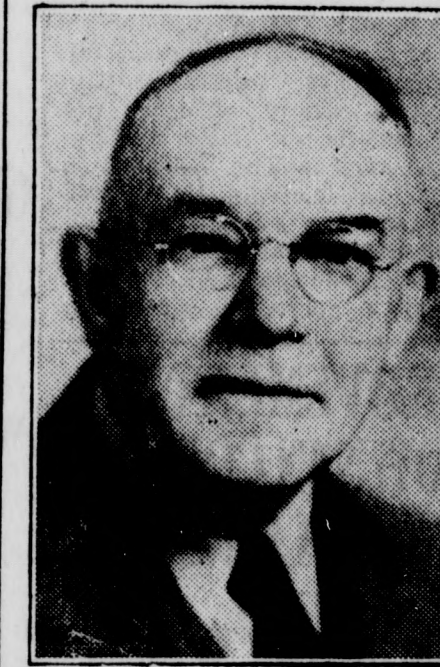

The many friends of Assistant Chief Fritz Hansen, of the Daly City Fire Department, are pleased to see him up and around again after being confined to his home for about a month with a blood clot on his leg.

practically on top of Height of Land. In the vicinity of McLeod Creek the terrain is rounded gravel hills, with slate bedrock. The natural approaches are via Fort Simpson, either by a two-hour plane trip or by boat up the Liard and Nahanni to within a hundred miles of the original find and thence by canoe.

Airways service has not been sufficient to look after the traffic and many parties were going in by dog-team early in the year, some from Great Bear Lake and some from Fort Liard.

The rush is on, but the story has not yet been written. It may mean another Klondyke in territory unsuccessfully chapter in the everlastingly by the plane, or just one more interesting history of the search for gold.

THE ROSE

WE STARTED out one day
To draw a pretty rose
But found it harder than
You ever would suppose.

The more we tried the less
It looked like any thing—
Except a sparrow's nest
Or maybe tangled string.

And then we splashed some ink
And said "Oh shucks!" and "Shoodle!"
But what was our surprise
To find we'd made a poodle!

CHERRY PIE IS THE NICEST OF ALL

How to Prepare America's Favorite Pastry.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE market news informs us that cherry pie season is here. Every once in a while you hear of a voting contest in regard to the most popular American foods.

I think if they were conducted on a seasonal basis, that cherry pie would be well at the head of the list of favorite dishes. It might be a two-crust pie or a deep dish pie. Either is a perfection if it is properly made. Nothing disappoints me so much, however, as to order cherry pie and get a floury sauce around the fruit instead of the sirup giving sauce which it should have.

So much juice cooks out of the cherries that it is a problem to prevent its soaking into the bottom crust. To prevent this, I mix one tablespoonful of sugar with one tablespoonful of flour and sprinkle it over the bottom crust before adding the cherries and the rest of the sugar. This absorbs enough of the juice but does not change the texture and flavor of the sirup. Sometimes an egg yolk or two is mixed with the sugar before it is sprinkled over the fruit. Cherry pie, by the way, needs plenty of sugar—almost as much as rhubarb.

When you line your pan with pastry, leave plenty of extra pastry at the edge and dampen it all the way around. Put on the top crust and fold the lower crust over the edge before pressing it down. Another way is to cut the two crusts evenly and to bind the edge with another strip of pastry.

Cherry pie, like all pies, must have a very hot oven at first; after fifteen minutes lower the temperature so that the fruit will be done by the time the pastry is brown. I forgot to mention that the top crust must be slit in several places to allow the steam to escape. My aunt used to make a paper funnel to put in the center to draw the juice to this point.

Individual, or large deep dish pies, are easy to prepare. The stoned fruit is put into the dishes in alternate layers with the sugar and the pastry put on the top of the dish. Sometimes a few raisins are added with the cherries.

Raisins are also used with cherries as a filling for a one-crust pie. A meringue is spread over the top after the pie is baked and then it is returned to the oven—a slow oven this time to set and brown the meringue. A lattice of strips of pastry may be used instead of the meringue.

Cherry cobbler, snowballs which are really steamed dumplings, baked dumplings and cottage pudding with cherry sauce are other good desserts made with this fruit. Preserves or jam made from cherries is one of the most satisfactory of all such products. Results are certain and nothing can be better for winter use.

Baked Cherry Pudding.

6 thin slices of bread
Butter
3 cups stoned cherries
1 cup sugar

Butter the slices of bread on the loaf before cutting and line a buttered baking dish with the buttered side of the bread toward the dish. Fill cherries and sugar, cover with bread and bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) half an hour.

Pastry.
1½ cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup fat
Cold water

Sift together the flour and salt. Cut in the fat with two case knives. For a large quantity a wooden bowl and chopping knife may be used. When fine add at one side of the bowl one tablespoonful of cold water and stir in as much of the flour and fat as the water will take up. Continue this until you have four or five balls of dough and some dry flour left in the bowl. Press together with your fingers. If all the dry flour is not taken up add a little more water. Chill and roll.

Cherry Jelly.
6½ cups sugar
1 cup liquid pectin
2 cups juice

Stem and crush well about three pounds ripe cherries. Do not pit. Add one-half cupful water, stir until dissolved, cover and cook slowly ten minutes. Let drip through jelly bag. Measure juice, add sugar and stir over fire until it boils. Add pectin and boil rapidly one minute.

Cherry Pie.
3 cups stoned cherries
1 cup sugar
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon flour

Line a pan with pastry, sprinkle with a tablespoonful of flour mixed

Elephant Is Victim of Love for Drink

New York.—Patsy, the elephant, is dead—a victim of the demon water.

His demise was reported by Mrs. Nellie J. Dutton, of Sarasota, Fla., only woman circus owner, on her return from South America.

"Water was his weakness," Mrs. Dutton reminisced, "and what a capacity he had. One morning on the trip we found the swimming pool dried up. Patsy had been on a spree during the night."

In Venezuela a scarcity of water developed. Patsy sulked because his 150-gallon-a-day ration was cut. Soon he became so weak with longing that he could only stagger at a snail's pace. And one day he lay down, sucked up two pails of water, and died.

"And with Patsy gone," concluded Mrs. Dutton, "our show went on the rocks."

with a tablespoonful of sugar, and add the cherries and sugar in layers. Dot with butter, cover with an upper crust, and bake in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) for ten minutes. Then lower the temperature and bake until the cherries are soft.

A LITTLE chopped parsley added to baked cold meat improves the flavor.

Don't use soda for washing china with gilt on it. If you do don't be surprised if the gilt gradually disappears.

If house plants droop from no apparent cause and refuse to thrive try watering them solely by pouring warm water into the saucers every day. Plants love bottom heat and it will sometimes give them a new lease on life.

A teaspoon of vinegar added to the water in which fish is boiled will help to make it firm and white.

Hero of 40 Years Ago to Get New Monument

Fort Worth.—Forty-four years after he saved the lives of a score of persons in a fire here, a new monument is to be erected to Al Hayne, British engineer.

Here on a visit in 1890, he rushed into a blazing theater and refused to leave until he was sure all had escaped.

Hayne lingered too long and was forced to jump. He broke both ankles in the leap, landed in blazing debris and was burned fatally. His was the only life lost.

An old smoke-smeared and weather-beaten monument to him is to be removed and a bronze bust erected near the site where the theater stood.

Tree Rings Show Dry Eras Suffered by Utah

Salt Lake City, Utah.—Drought periods have come at various times, often much more serious than this summer's, F. W. Muir, naturalist, said he learned from a study of trees.

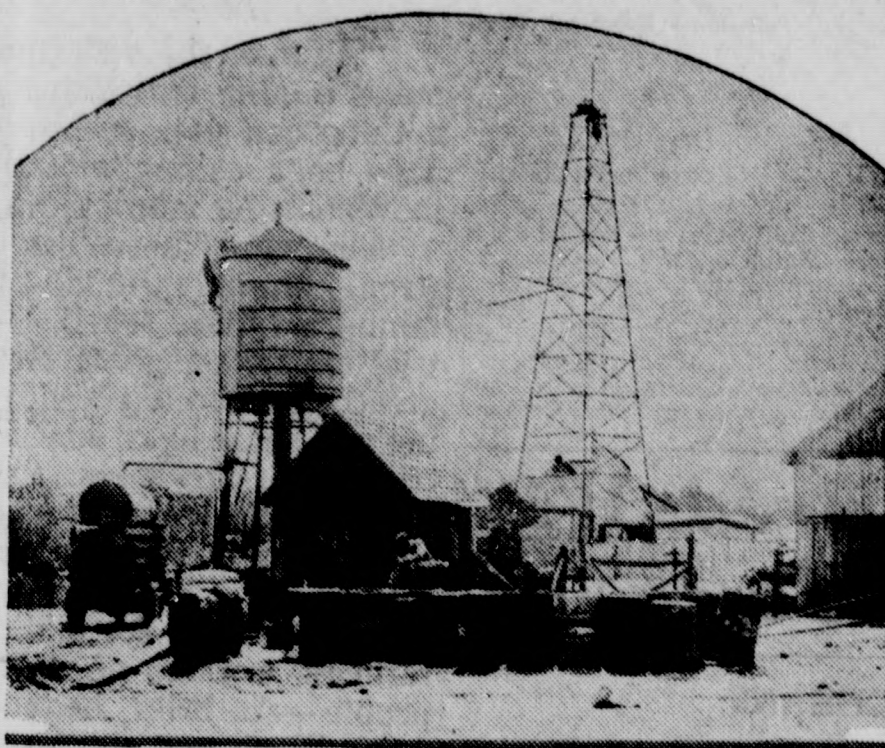

A study of cross sections of cores bored into trees revealed drought cycles ranging from 9 to 18 years in length, he said.

"The years 1843 to 1850 were particularly drought stricken in Utah," he explained. "The trees show by their growth that in 1901 to 1905 we experienced another such period. We are likely to have wet years in the future as in the past."

Women Safest Drivers

Salt Lake City.—Women are safer and more conscientious drivers than men, even if they did teach the "weak sex" the art, a drivers' license examination list revealed. Of 75 examinations given by the Utah state highway patrol, ten failed. All were men.

Oil Strike on a Delaware Farm

This well, drilled on the farm of United States Senator Townsend, and which struck oil at 400 feet, may be the start of an oil rush in Bridgeville, Del., to compare with those in many a Texas or Oklahoma village. The well was drilled by the Cleveland Petroleum company, which has been studying the region for the past seven years and which has bought up options on farms within a radius of several miles of the strike.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

When Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia saved the city $35,000 a year by ordering the tug Macom laid up, he put an end to a bit of civic swank unique in this country at least. The Macom, once a mere police tug, was fitted out more or less elegantly 15 years ago at a cost of $30,000 in order that distinguished visitors and native sons returning to this country in triumph might be given a fitting welcome. Those honored—they ranged from men world known as diplomats to a swimmer of the English channel—were taken from liners at quarantine. Then began a colorful procession up the bay with harbor craft saluting and the Macom replying with a siren so loud that those aboard were all but deafened. Often fireboats played cascades of water against the sky and always the street cleaners band played national anthems and music of the day. Usually the distinguished visitor didn't see or hear much because he was busy with reporters.

Pier A, down at the foot of Manhattan island, was the place where the visitor was taken ashore, while police lines held back throngs, and then was driven in triumph up Broadway as ticker tape and torn up telephone books whitened the air. Those paper showers, as nearly as I can learn, date back to November 9, 1918. With the city practically driven insane because of the "false armistice," some one thought of throwing torn paper from the windows of an office building. The inspiration proved popular, so popular, indeed, that during the welcome given Charles A. Lindbergh on his return from his solo flight over the Atlantic, about a hundred tons of waste were swept up by such street cleaners as were not busy playing in the band.

In connection with the Macom, there was a mayor's committee for the reception of distinguished visitors. Of that committee, Grover A. Whalen was chairman for so long that he has ridden more times on the Macom than anyone else in New York. In a silk hat, cutaway coat, striped gray trousers and white spats, and with a gardenia in his buttonhole, Mr. Whalen seemed to typify New York as he shook the hand of queens, princes, great soldiers, great statesmen and great athletes. But for some reason or other, Mayor Walker deposed him and the late Mayor Deegan got his place. The present administration restored him and he was the city's representative at the welcoming of the fleet. And then Mayor LaGuardia took the Macom away from him.

The aldermen were not included in the fleet welcomes. That caused some hard feelings. But they were soothed by a special trip around the island which gave them an excellent view of the navy. None aboard knew that that was the last voyage of the Macom. The mayor, looking for expenses that could be lopped off, came across that $35,000 annual Macom item. He wanted to know all about the Macom and found, as he said, that she was really the mayor's private yacht. The mayor held he didn't need a yacht and issued an order that took all the glory away from the Macom. Eventually, she will again become an ordinary police tug.

At Cove Neck, on Oyster Bay near Sagamore Hill, is a little gray schoolhouse. The bell won't ring next fall since it has been decided to discontinue the school. It was in that little gray schoolhouse that the children of the late Theodore Roosevelt learned their three R's. It was also to that little gray schoolhouse that Theodore Roosevelt came at Christmas time when he was President of the United States and, laying aside his cares of state, played Santa Claus for the children. His widow followed that custom also. But years came on Miss Ella Stewart, who taught the Roosevelt youngsters, and recently she applied for retirement. Also the attendance of the school shrank to a mere 20. So, despite its memories, it will be discontinued.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

"All Things to All Men"

THE origin of this phrase has a long record of use in our literature and is found even in the most modern contexts with a wide variety of inferences.

"All things to all men" comes to us from the Bible, where its reference is entirely spiritual, the "all things" being the salvation of the soul.

We find its original use in the first epistle of Paul the apostle to the Corinthians. In chapter nine we find:

"To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I made all things to all men that I might by all means save some."

Safety First Campaigns Old Stuff Back in 1808

Philadelphia.—Safety first campaigns did not start with the advent of the automobile. They were old stuff in 1808, as revealed in one of a collection of children's books recently exhibited here.

The old book published in that year contains a number of "cautionary stories in verse." One example was:

"Miss Helen was always too giddy to heed
What her mother had told her to shun,
For frequently over the street in full speed
She would cross where the carriages run."

The moral, of course, was reached in the final verse when the young lady who disobeyed her mother was struck by one of the many carriages.

Good Taste Today

BY EMILY POST

Author of

"ETIQUETTE," "THE BLUE BOOK OF SOCIAL USAGE," ETC.

IMMUTABLE PRINCIPLES OF COURTESY

DEAR Mrs. Post: I would not think of disagreeing with your more than positive disapproval of the hostess who serves herself first, but I would very much like you to answer in your column whether you would not reconsider the strictness of your ruling under the following circumstances: Last evening at a dinner party in the house of a very distinguished lady of best social position, the dinner progressed precisely according to your approved conventions. Every dish was presented first to the guest of honor—a somewhat elderly lady, who of course sat on the right of the host. All went beautifully until after the ice cream when a layer cake was proffered to this guest of honor, who not seeing clearly without her glasses, helped herself to a slice. No one else took any because the cake swarmed with tiny red ants! But the guest of honor ate a mouthful before her neighbor at dinner warned her to eat no more. Now, dear Mrs. Post, what have you to say against the wisdom of having the hostess help herself first, after that? Do you think a rule that can permit such an unfortunate result still worth defending? Do you take dares? Will you accept mine and answer me in print?

Answer: Of course I will! I am willing to admit that the situation could hardly have been more unpleasant, but I cannot see that it presents an argument for a change in the convention of hospitality. If a hostess have untrained and irresponsible servants, who cannot be trusted to serve food decently, then she should have every dish presented to her for her careful inspection, or perhaps, better yet, have it placed in front of her on the table so that she herself may serve it.

But that this accident happened on perhaps one occasion in a hundred millions would be no excuse for the rudeness of all the millions of other hostesses in helping themselves first to dishes, which they have every reason to believe have not the slightest chance of being the playground of an ant colony. Of course, if we were all to live again in the crude days of frontier towns, then it would be proper to go back to the customs of those days. But if we take it for granted that our food is eatable, then the fundamental principle of courtesy demands that we offer to our guest of honor first choice of whatever we may have.

MISCELLANEOUS

DEAR Mrs. Post: My daughter is going away to college and it is necessary to mark all her clothes. I hate to write on all her pretty new things with indelible ink but an instruction leaflet sent me says that everything must be marked with the student's name in full and also the number of her dormitory. Do you know of any new way to avoid ink-marking?

Answer: I don't know of any new way, but I do know of the woven emery tapes that can be bought in every dry goods store in the United States. You can have anything put on them that you choose, in any type of lettering and in almost any color, and I am sure they are not expensive.

Dear Mrs. Post: I have just become engaged to a girl who has never met my family. She knows that I am American born but of foreign parents who speak practically no English and have done nothing in all their lives but work and raise children. I am the only one of the children who has so far managed to get a college education. I am not ashamed of my parents, but I would like to bring about this meeting with the least amount of embarrassment to all concerned because I am sure that the situation is going to be awkward now and at the wedding.

Answer: Although there is a rule that your parents should go to see your fiancée and her family, there are few rules which cannot be altered to fit unusual circumstances. Therefore, if you think your family would be more at ease at home, then ask your fiancée to go with you to see them. After she has met them you and she can decide on the best way to bring about a meeting between her parents and yours. Say to her exactly what you have said to me; that you are not ashamed and that you love and respect them. She will help you, I am sure, to make the meeting smooth. The engagement is always announced by the girl's family and usually the man's family has no part. Your parents will of course have to make the effort to go to the wedding, but their not being able to speak English should not matter since little more than "how do you do" and "thank you" is necessary. I wish I could answer more usefully, but I think it is something that you and your bride-to-be will have to talk over together.

Sales of Home Breds Will Give Big Boost To Racing

By J. W. MARCHBANK

In a few days the annual yearling sales will be on at Saratoga in New York state. Men and women from all parts of the country will gather at the ringside each night for a couple of weeks trying to pick out a colt or filly that fond anticipation pictures as another Equipoise. It is a highly thrilling business.

In my way of looking at things the time is not far distant when the West will have as notable gatherings as Saratoga. Better thoroughbreds are being bred in California and other states out this way than ever before and a beginning has been made in the establishment of a sales paddock at Tanforan for the disposal of the home bred.

Saratoga in the East and Tanforan in the West. Such is the program, the unfolding of which will mean a great advance in breeding and racing. To work out the problem of making the western sales headquarters as important as the eastern, expansion of the racing will have to come along with the upbuilding of breeding.

To develop the racing we must offer a game as fair in every way as that in other sections. For example, it will not do to retain the twelve per cent commission on the pari-mutuel pools. A high "take" is outmoded. To get into the modern swing of things the twelve must be reduced to nine. Visitors and home folks alike will realize, with a reasonably low "take," that the sport is on the best plane possible and will flock to the tracks.

Frank R. Kent, political commentator, says in the Baltimore Sun: "It is utterly impossible to keep up with the things that happen in Washington."

A reader asks where the country's population is most dense. In most cases, we suspect, it is from the neck up.

Man is the only animal that knows right from wrong, says a scientist. Also, the only one that needs a lawyer.

Evidently the N. R. A. was intended to increase employment and the picturesque of American speech.

The Outlook For Mining

"Signs of the times point unerringly to the fact that metal mining is walking right into a boom period that nothing can stop, according to the Mining Review. "We have been calling attention to this steadily expanding movement for months; we want to emphasize it now."

The word "boom" in this connection may be a trifle strong, but only the most pessimistic could hold fears for mining's future. There is a substantial amount of industrial expansion going on; public works are under way; greatly accelerated home construction is anticipated. Mining will share in all such activities—in this modern industrial age of ours we are vitally dependent upon the metals. We literally live surrounded by copper, zinc, lead, etc. Practically everything we make or buy or use involves them.

Better times for mining would mean better times for farmers, workers of all kinds, storekeepers, professional people—in brief, better times for everyone. Mining is normally a great employer, a great taxpayer, a great creator of purchasing power. If it comes back, we will have taken a long step nearer recovery.

One can usually have the last word in an argument by saying "Yes."

SERA PROGRAM IS WORK RELIEF PLAN

The total number of employees approved to work on the Lake Merced project is 1,725. Statistics compiled for the week ending July 12 show 168 men are at present employed on the job. The amount approved for labor is $554,736. Of this amount $8,638.21 had been spent up to July 12 for such purposes, leaving a balance of $546,097.79.

The SERA program is a work relief plan. Only socially desirable and economically sound projects are selected. They are staffed by cases whose need for relief has been certified and occupational fitness determined.

Each project must be worth-while, that is, self supporting. It must give a return for what is expended. An engineering project must represent a good investment; a research project must fill a need, otherwise it must be discontinued. These are the administration's requirements.

By the end of July approximately many thousands of persons will be given employment under the SERA.

The SERA program is not giving out any direct relief. It is up to each county to take care of its own indigent.

The work will be apportioned with reference to the needs of the individual cases. Those with a greater number of dependents will be entitled to work more days than those with fewer dependents, according to this program.

The occupational fitness of each case is determined and the need for relief is certified. All cases will be recertified at least once a month in compliance with the SERA's demands.

Mildred King, pretty co-ed of Stanford University, at Palo Alto, Cal., has been placed under heavy guard following threats against her family in a $75,000 extortion plot.

CARE INCREASES MILEAGE OF TIRES

While present day tires are better built than ever before, a little care will add materially to the mileage they yield and at the same time provide protection from accidents caused by punctures or blowouts, says a statement by the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association discussing various features of tire care.

Under-inflation will cause breaks in the sidewalls of tires and lead to blowouts when least expected. On the other hand, over-inflation makes riding uncomfortable and is also harmful to the tires. The safe procedure is to follow the suggestion of the car manufacturer or tire dealer as to the amount of air to be carried. Modern air pumps at filling stations make this a comparatively easy rule to observe.

Never start the car too quickly, as spinning the wheels will cause heavy wear on the rubber. Quick application of the brakes is equally harmful.

Whenever possible avoid running over broken glass, boards or rubbish on the street or highway.

Avoid parking where the tires will stand in a pool of oil, as oil has a destructive effect on rubber.

Never use the curb as a brake because a broken tire casing may be the result.

Protect Ignition

Ignition conduits that are cracked from heat or age and rubber insulation that is oil soaked or terminals that are loose should be replaced or repaired without delay, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Otherwise ignition trouble may result, with the possibility of damage to expensive electrical units.

COLUMN OF N. R. A. FACTS

INFORMATION regarding the N. R. A. will be furnished each week by W. H. CLAY, Chairman of the local N. R. A. Publicity Committee.

In 1918, our whole citizenry was aroused to the lofty purpose of freeing a war-ridden world from future strife. During the war the spirit of unity pervaded every branch of industry and activity. Men and women worked together as they had never done before or since. The heiress and the factory girl worked side by side in relief stations, the scions of aristocracy and the laborer were pals in the trenches. A common purpose fired their imaginations. They shared joys over victories, sorrows over losses. Hopes and fears united persons in all walks of economic and social life.

If the war did nothing else it proved that when the American people understood and faced a national crisis they could rise to unknown heights in the spirit of brotherhood, co-operation and faith in each other and in their leaders. The rallying spirit of the American people is a national trait. Its amusing phases crop up at alumni reunions and football games. The serious side is found at the great conventions, Chautauquas, revival meetings and community forums. Sometimes the underlying motif is pleasure and friendship; sometimes it is distress, the furtherance of an ideal or cause or for the better understanding and support of a principle.

It is not surprising then, with this tendency for concerted action, that at this time when we are emerging from the shadows of a national emergency which was by far more devastating to the lives and morale of our people than the World War, our government expects from its citizens the support and faith in a program, devised to combat the insidious affects of the depression, which they would give to a less glorious enterprise.

The Recovery Program is not appealing to a certain class, creed or section of the country. It has been devised for the mass of the citizens and it looks to them for support. This support can result only from a clear understanding of the principles set up by the National Recovery Administration. It is essential that the people of the United States become intelligently familiar with the aims and purposes of the NRA. They must realize that the problems we face as a nation cannot be solved by stubbornness, selfishness or violence. Intelligent discussion, fair representation, arbitration and co-operation must be the outstanding factors in the effort of labor and industry to usher in a new day for the 40,000,000 wage and salaried earners of the country. These 40,000,000 persons have other millions dependent on their earning capacity, their health and contentedness. These people are the producers and ultimate consumers of what they produce. They are recognized as the backbone of the nation.

In dealing with the economic problems which, due to our complicated system of finance, production and distribution, have appeared on the horizon of even the most unobtrusive household in our land, the highest degree of integrity and sincerity must be used. With the self-respect and happiness of the nation hanging in the balance, it is hoped that all the people affected by the New Deal, and that means the entire population, shall courageously strive toward the sympathetic understanding and solution of their neighbor's problems and thus achieve the "more abundant life" for his community, state and country.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE WEEK

Cost of Living Up 1 Per Cent for Six Months: During the six months ending June, 1934, the general index of living costs has increased 1 per cent, according to the U. S. Department of Labor. For the country as a whole food increased 2.7 per cent, clothing 2.1 per cent and house furnishings 1.8 per cent between December, 1933, and June, 1934. Rent, however, decreased by 1.7 per cent and fuel and light decreased by 2.1 per cent. No change for the six months is reported for the miscellaneous group of items including medical and dental services, hospital rates, laundry, transportation, etc. Comparing this June with last June, the cost of living has gone up 6.3 per cent.

Employment Gains: The consumption goods industries have re-employed about 850,000 people since March 1933 and by May 1934 had reached the stage where they were employing only 400,000 fewer persons than in May of the prosperous year 1929. In the durable goods industries, approximately a million people have been re-employed, leaving about a million and a half still to be reabsorbed.

Women At Work: Seasonable declines in May employment were reported by some of the chief women-emplying industries but compared with May of last year all showed employment gains. Employment of women in textiles increased 21 per cent over last May; in shoes nearly 12 per cent, clothing 7 per cent, laundries 7 per cent, retail trade 15 per cent.

Blue Eagle Bread: The billion-dollar baking industry, affecting about 150,000 workers and 25,000 bakeries throughout the country began operating under a code July 9. According to General Johnson, competition in this industry is so keen that there is little likelihood that prices detrimental to consumers will develop. As a further safeguard, a representative of the Consumers' Advisory Board has been assigned as full-time adviser to the Administration Member of the Code Authority.

Fels Company Cuts Work-Week: "Wages in the Fels-Naptha factory have been consistently above code requirements," the company announces. "By decreasing the working week to five days, without reduction of wages from the five and one-half day week basis, we feel that it is only taking an additional step in the company's efforts to go beyond the letter of the New Deal requirements and carry out the spirit of the President's program." General Johnson has sent his congratulations to the concern for voluntarily setting this example for others to follow.

New Ruling Protects Consumers: NRA has ruled that retail merchants advertising or offering for sale on the installment plan any merchandise which may be bought at a discount for cash must make the price difference clear to customers. If they do not, they will be regarded as violating the "inaccurate advertising" provision of the retail code.

Code For Puerto Rico Needlework Industry: The President has approved the Needlework Industry Code for Puerto Rico, which is its second largest industry, employing 75,000. Within 90 days a fact finding commission must report on the workings of the code. The reduction in hours from 48 before the code to 40 is expected to increase employment about 16 per cent. Minimum weekly wages are fixed at $2 for homeworkers and $5 for factory machine workers. Hand-sewing and embroidery workers in factories will receive $3. Low as this seems, it represents an increase of over 50 per cent in pre-code average factory wages and even more for home-workers.

National Labor Board Report: In the year this board functioned, it mediated 1,496 strikes involving 1,070,000 workers. Of these strikes, 1,145 were settled through the efforts of the national board and its regional units, and 498 threatened strikes were averted.

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Some Little Known Matters That Should Prove of General Interest

(By Maude Larue Ives)

Question: What are the three largest islands in the world?

Answer: 1, Greenland; 2, New Guinea; 3, Borneo. Australia, universally believed to be an island, is now classed as a continent.

Question: What kind of a bear is the "Bruin" of the stories?

Answer: The brown bear of Europe and Asia, for "bruin" merely means brown. This is the bear which is most frequently seen in menageries or with strolling musicians.

Question: Of what use is the tail of a beaver?

Answer: The tail is naked of hair, but is covered with scalelike, horny skin. It acts as a rudder and oar when the animal is in a pond or stream, and when slapped on the water it sounds a loud signal to announce the approach of danger.

Question: Where is Mandalay and what is significant about it?

Answer: The city of Mandalay is located in the heart of upper Burma, a province of British India which extends down the western coast of the Malay Peninsula. It is a city of peculiar charm, made known to all the world through song and story. The chief features of the city are the gay bazaars, the British cantonment or military station, the old palace of the kings, built of beautifully carved teakwood, and the numerous monasteries, temples and pagodas, the most famous of these being the Aracan pagoda, in which is housed the brass image of Buddha, which is twelve feet in height. Silk weaving is the principal industry of this picturesque city of 140,000 inhabitants.

Kipling has immortalized this city in his poem, "Mandalay," the opening stanza of which reads:

"By the old Moulmein Pagoda, lookin' eastward to the sea,
There's a Burma girl a settin', and I know she thinks o' me;

For the wind is in the palm trees and the temple bells they say:
'Come you back, you British soldier—come you back to Mandalay!'"

Question: What is the distinction between a cocoon and a chrysalis?

Answer: The caterpillars of moths spin for themselves cocoons of silk, but those of butterflies shut themselves up in hard, smooth cases, and are known as chrysalids.

Question: What food properties does buttermilk contain?

Answer: Buttermilk is the milky liquid remaining after butter has been made from cream. It contains casein, sugar, a small amount of lactic acid, some butter fat and a few other substances distributed through the liquid, which is largely composed of water.

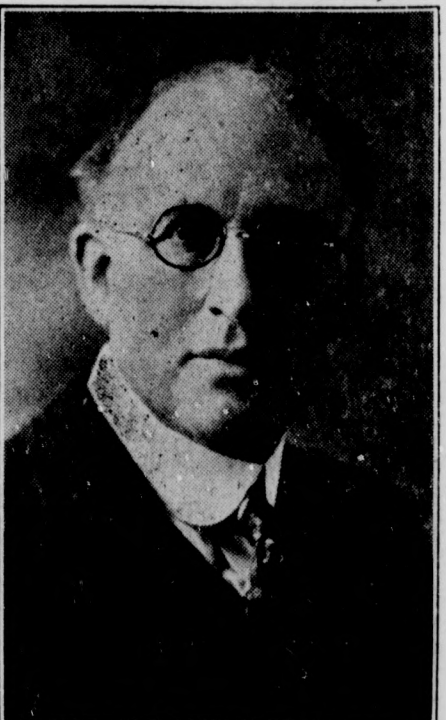

MAYFIELD ROAD WORK PROGRESSES

The widening of U. S. No. 101 through the Mayfield business district is progressing rapidly, according to the San Jose Office of the National Automobile Club, and it is anticipated that the work will be completed on or before August 15.

Traffic is being routed one-half of the road while work is under way on the other half. The used portion of the road is sufficiently wide that it is not necessary to enforce one-way traffic and there are no delays.

SOME ANCIENT HAPPENINGS OF CITY REVIEWED

Incidents of Pioneer Days and Characters Recalled For Our Readers

(By Old-Timer)

As stated last week, the first unit of the state highway was through Daly City, extending from the county line southward through the El Portal to Market street, Colma, better known as Jim Casey's White House saloon and the Colma fight arena corner. Through the efforts of our enterprising go-getters the highway commission made a special exception of Daly City and this was the only municipality in California to have its main thoroughfare paved from the money derived from the $45,000,000 highway state bond issue. That is the reason that the present $850,000 widening work on Mission street is being done without direct assessments upon the property owners. Later, when the state highway was built to the Santa Clara County line, a San Mateo County road bond issue for $1,250,000 was floated for laterals. The election resulted in the success of the campaign by a vote of 4253 for to 1044 against. So valuable did this achievement prove that a system of ocean-side trucks soon put the Ocean Shore Railroad out of commission, so that the State Railroad Commission allowed that railroad to discontinue operation, tear up its tracks and junk its other old equipment. Now a road district has been organized for construction of an ocean-side boulevard between San Francisco and Santa Cruz, to traverse the old Ocean Shore Railroad right of way.

In the issue of last week a promise was made that these articles will not be continued for more than fifteen years. This was in order to assure the readers of The Record that they will not have to endure forever. It is timely now to state that if you are pleased, give Old Timer praise—but if you have a kick to make, just kick the editor's pants, for that is what his pants are made for.

For many years Colma was known as School House Station, on the main line of the Southern Pacific, so named for that grand old 1865 pioneer, R. S. Thornton, for whom the Thornton School was named. Mr. Thornton was the blacksmith and railroad agent, and Taylor was the first postmaster. The surrounding hills up to twenty-five years ago were mostly sand dunes, where now the most famous gardens flourish.

The only secret societies in 1909 were Colma-Vista Grande Aerie No. 1848, F. O. E., with Z. E. Montgomery, president, and Antone Sturla, secretary; Olive Grove No. 116, U. A. O. D., B. W. Spellman, noble arch, and George C. Luce, secretary; Court Colma No. 83, F. O. A., Thomas Spellman, chief ranger, and W. J. Savage, secretary. All three are still flourishing.

The only churches were St. Ann's, Catholic, and Henry Ward Brown's Congregational chapel. St. Ann's parish extended to School street, and north of that was Ocean View parish, presided over by that grand social character, Rev. Father Cooper. Creed never interfered in his good deeds during his entire lifetime.

Jefferson School, still at Colma, was presided over by Principal W. J. Savage. There were no other schools.

Biggie Park and dance hall completed and dedicated April 18, 1909. This calls to mind that Colma was the sporting center of California, where the world championship fights were all pulled off. The arena was next to the White House saloon until "Sunny Jim" Coffroth erected the Coffroth Arena on Sikes avenue, one block from Mission road.

The Abby House, at the intersection of Mission road and San Jose avenue, was sporting a handsome flag—Pete Nelson's saloon.

Fahy Bros. new saloon, grand opening April 10.

Fred Bauer, popular Colma dairyman, had narrow escape from death. While driving his wagon from the Carroll Bros. stone yard the wagon was struck by a speeding San Mateo suburban car. Fred escaped with a badly sprained ankle.

Israel Poket's beautiful new saloon at Hillcrest is a strictly up-to-date place in every respect; had a grand opening.

Jim Swift, genial editor of Redwood City Democrat, shaking hands with many Colma friends.

Caleb Coakley's popular road house at Mission road and School street was the scene of a spirited all night party.

Joseph H. Bullock, district attorney, called and congratulated the Record upon its thrift and general attractiveness.

Plucky Deputy Constable Bob Silicani encountered a rough character armed with a gun, who promised to "shoot somebody up." The officer disarmed him and gave him a swift kick as he departed for parts unknown.

Liquor licenses granted by the supervisors to Maude E. Earle, Caesar Eilers, John Biggie & Son, E. V. Navlet, C. Catouri, N. Grannucci, I. Poket and Conrad Mundelius, Colma.

was a great disappointment. It was to have been a 45-round bout, and the fight fans came from all over the United States just to see Papke slap Kelly to sleep in the first round.

Mr. and Mrs. James Poket, who now reside at 6548 Mission street, were the first couple married in the Crocker Tract. July 20, 1909, Miss Clare Biebel and James Poket were joined in wedlock by Father Lane.

FAR WESTERN BUSINESS TREND ON THE INCREASE

Despite factors adverse to industry of the Pacific Coast during the last two months, Far Western business not only held its own but even gained slightly during the month of June, the Bank of America's monthly index shows.

The preliminary index figure for June stood at 65, which was three-tenths of a point ahead of May and an increase of 7.6 per cent over June 1933. A decline in June business as compared with May of this year was generally anticipated.

The index, which is based upon carloadings, electric power production and bank debits, is now almost 21 per cent above the depression low of March, 1933. The slight gain of June over May is explicable in part by the influence of heavier carloadings brought about by the tying up of three coast waterfronts.

Carloadings in California, Nevada, New Mexico and Arizona during June gained about 24 per cent over the corresponding month a year ago, and for the first six months of this year the gain was 32 per cent on the basis of the 1933 comparison. Out of 24 major industries reporting, 19 forecast an increase in their freight car requirements for the third quarter of 1934 over 1933.

June was the sixth consecutive month of 1934 in which retail sales of the Twelfth Federal Reserve District have shown an increase over corresponding period of 1933. Eighty-five department stores in this area reported their sales last month to be 1.2 per cent higher than a year ago.

About 24.8 per cent more employees were on California industrial payrolls during June than in the same month a year ago. Total amount of weekly payrolls was 24.6 per cent higher than in June of 1933.

Building activities in eight Far Western cities fell below 1933 levels during the first half of this year, but business activity as reflected by bank debits in 27 cities last month gained 10 per cent over June of last year.

The general level of prices received by farmers in California for 24 basic products during June was 93.8 per cent of the July, 1910-June, 1915, level, the highest point since December, 1930.

PROGRESS ON NEW ROOSEVELT HIGHWAY

Work is progressing rapidly on the new section of the Roosevelt Highway along the ocean between San Luis Obispo and Monterey, reports the National Automobile Club. Much interest is being shown in this spectacular marine drive which will open up a virgin territory for the motorist and offer a splendid optional route up the coast when completed early in 1935.

"MY DEAR CHILD!"

By AVERY W. RUBLE
© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

"AND you'll be eighteen tomorrow, eh?" George Carter gazed proudly at his diminutive auburn-haired offspring as she slipped into her chair at the breakfast table.

"What'll we give a great big girl like her for a present, Mother? A nice big dolly?"

He looked expectantly from Myra, his wife, to Nancy, his daughter. Then his gaze turned to hurt astonishment when neither smiled at this witty sally.

"Yes, you would suggest a dolly," Nancy's fresh young voice was scathing. "You've been acting as if I were four ever since I came home. If you want to know what I really want—it's a lip stick and a boy friend."

A bomb exploding in their midst could not have caused a greater upheaval.

George Carter choked on a piece of toast.

Myra in the act of taking her second cup, poured the hot coffee on the breakfast cloth.

"My dear child!" The parents in horrified chorus.

"Yeah, that's what I want—a boy friend. All the other girls have them. M'ree Collier, two years younger than I am, has heaps of them."

"Oh, she has?" Myra gasped helplessly.

"Yes, and it isn't enough that I'm handicapped by inheriting Mother's snub nose and your carrot-top, but you have to dress me queerly."

"My dear—your mother's nose is reticent—it's her best feature," George Carter defended gallantly.

"And your father's hair is auburn," Myra reproved, not to be outdone in chivalry.

"As to your clothes—"

"I know what you're going to say. I ought to. I've heard it often enough. You think just because you're president of the Parents' league, you've got to be an example of how to keep young girls young—so I'm a fright in jerseys and flat-heeled shoes," she fixed her mother with accusing eyes.

Mr. Carter threw in a mild "Now, my dear child, I'm sure your mother knows best—"

"Yes, she knows best, and because you're a college president with young women to save I can't have even a box of talcum."

Tears were very imminent now.

"Here I am practically doomed to be an old maid by the two people who ought to help me the most. No boy will look at an out-of-date blotto like me."

"Thank God for that!" George ejaculated fervently.

"The clothes I've got were all right in a Switzerland boarding school where there is such a thing as a jeune fille, but here in America they are a disgrace. I want a fur coat, a chic hat and high-heeled pumps like M'ree Collier's got."

Nancy's voice was almost a wail.

"When I walked home with her yesterday every boy we passed looked at her."

"I'm thankful you are not the kind of girl boys stare at," her father insisted.

"That's just where you make a mistake. In the proper clothes I am!" replied his daughter provocatively.

"Certainly not. You're still a little girl. No amount of clothes could make any difference. If I were a budding man," said George Carter in sudden irritation, "I'd bet that if you walked down town with me not a single man would do more than glance at you!"

"Atta boy, Dad. Be a sport now and come through. Bet."

Nancy pressed home her vantage point.

"Nancy!" came gentle reproof from behind the coffee percolator.

"I've got to convince you. Let me walk just six blocks with you," coaxed the wily Nancy. "You walk behind me and watch. Only, Mother, I'll have to wear your pumps and fur coat."

"No, indeed!"

"You see!" jibed Nancy. "You're afraid to bet—you both know I'm right."

"All right! All right!"

Myra threw up her hands.

"But I think you are out of your mind."

Nancy wore a cherubic smile.

"You didn't name your bet, Dad," she reminded him. "If I win I get a fur coat and a make-up box."

"My Godfrey!"

"No backing out!" pleaded Nancy.

"Backing out—never! But you're going to get the disappointment of your life. Not a man will look your way—"

"You're going to be surprised, Dad," retorted Nancy.

"Do we start now?"

George Carter looked at Myra. "I guess she is too big for the doll," he said ruefully.

Then sternly to Nancy: "We'll be right behind you, young lady."

"Of course, that's part of the bargain. Give me your things, Mother."

"Absolutely ridiculous," grumbled George to Myra as they followed Nancy's tapping high-heeled pumps.

A young man with a brief case passed them.

He glanced at Nancy curiously, and hurried on.

A solemn, black-frocked clergyman passed.

He stared at Nancy, looked away, looked back again.

His face showed intense interest.

He hurried on.

Traffic forced a passing motorist close to the curb. He looked at Nancy, bumped the curb and looked again.

Nancy turned to glance back at George and Myra Carter.

Her piquant little face framed in the fur of her mother's coat started a train of thought for them.

Yes, she was grown up.

They had been suppressing her.

She was not the little girl any more they had fondly tried to keep her.

The six blocks were nearly done now.

Grant Manning, the new young man in the chair of international relations passed them.

People said he had a private fortune.

Doing research work.

"A coming man."

"Now there was the type he'd like Nancy some day to . . ."

Manning was looking at Nancy.

Without a doubt. Hard.

George saw him actually tear his eyes away from her.

Poor little rascal, George thought, she shall have her high heels for keeps.

"Oh, Manning!" he called.

"You've met Mrs. Carter, but I want you to meet my daughter, Nancy."

Nancy talked to Manning in a self-possessed manner, which more than ever convinced George that he and Myra had narrowly escaped starting some sort of a complex in Nancy by refusing to let her be her age.

When they left Manning, George was in such an expansive mood that he not only paid his bet in full, but he also gave Nancy carte blanche in the exclusive shop to which she took him.

That was Nancy's debut.

Perhaps George Carter helped things along by his unexpressed desire.

Perhaps Myra did it with choice food.

Perhaps it was the new clothes and the make-up box. Or the red hair and the provocative snub nose.

But certainly a year later when things came to such a pass that whenever the front door opened and it invariably was to admit Grant Manning, George's hopes soared like an airplane.

And when Grant actually asked Nancy to marry him George was so pleased he almost went out of control.

"I was so young I thought you'd never notice me, Grant. What first made you notice me?" Nancy, after the fashion of all lovers, asked him.

"You acted so oddly, darling," he said.

From the snug haven of his arms Nancy merely wrinkled that delectable little snub nose.

"Honey," he added in a whisper, "why did you put out your tongue at me that morning?"

Thrills in Profusion

for the Adventurers

The adventures of this century are the archeologists, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Theirs is the thrill of finding the new, the strange and the startling. Trekking through jungles, the archeologist can find more thrills than the big-game hunter of Africa or the airman of the oceans wastes.

Expeditions sent from Washington recently uncovered stones with inscriptions unfolding stories of a people whose very existence was unknown before America was discovered.

The Spaniards overwhelmed them and the conquered people dropped into obscurity. Now, however, their history is being uncovered and the world is learning the tale of the Maya people of Central America.

There is Tezma, for instance, an important outlying city of the old Maya empire. It is a great acropolis more than 500 feet on a side, having on its summit five impressive temples surrounding an immense sunken court.

Several score large and small cities and towns have been located in the jungles of Yucatan showing that the old empire was mighty and powerful, with arts and crafts as superior as those of ancient Egypt.

The whole of Yucatan seems filled with these lost cities. Some are unimportant. Others are yielding priceless treasures in jewels and art, and still others are yet to be explored.

That the Maya people were intelligent and cultured there is no doubt. The Spaniards who suddenly swooped down upon them were children in comparison.

Maya rulers offered the Spaniards cotton shirts and, later, jewels. Cotton was one of the great gifts of the Maya nation to the world. At that time it was unappreciated.

More Elk Last Winter

More elk were counted on feeding grounds to the Jackson Hole (Wyo.) region last winter than in any previous year, the reservation protector of the United States Department of Agriculture reports.

At the elk refuge, maintained by the bureau of biological survey, 7,456 animals were counted, and those found on three nearby state feeding grounds brought the total to 11,239, about 1,250 more than ever before counted. The count was made co-operatively by the biological survey, the forest service, and the Wyoming state game department. About 2,000 tons of hay and 100 tons of cottonseed cake were used during the winter in feeding the elk on the refuge.

Dark Sheer Prints for Midseason

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WITH the waning of the good old summertime when the clothes you have on hand begin to take on that sort of a "has-been" look which happens in even the best of regulated wardrobes and when it is too early to don new autumn regalia, what then? Every woman who aspires to an up-to-the-moment appearance knows the baffled feeling which comes when this nagging, disturbing-of-the-peace question comes up.

But why worry, for here's encouraging news in regard to this very problem. Briefly told, it's the good looking jacket suits of dark triple sheer print which are now showing in leading style shops and departments wherever one may turn. You can rest assured that an ensemble such as any one of the stunning models here pictured, will pilot you victoriously through that dreaded stretch of time which spans from the burning, scorching days of summer to weather bearing cool breezes which hint that autumn is on its way hitherward.

The beauty of these triple sheer costumes which are now playing so conspicuous a role on fashion's stage is that they are being given a styling so absolutely up to the instant chic, the moment you don one you are apt to experience thrills as exultant as a mannikin at a style show as she pirouettes lack and forth before the eager and admiring eyes of her audience.

Then, too, these sheers are cool when you want them to be and with their jackets they provide just the degree of comfort and protection necessary for the erratic changes of a fickle thermometer. By the way had you noticed that scarcely a one-piece dress is to be seen this season, be it day or night, without a matching or related jacket? Everything with a jacket, is the new slogan and just because the idea is so thoroughly practical the vogue is moving on of its own momentum.

Turning to our illustration we know that you will agree that the jacket dress on the standing figure is of unerring style appeal. It is fashioned of triple sheer of bengberg in the new Vionnet bowknot print. The crisp organdie jabot is worked in the two colors of the print. The slim little jacket with its voluminous and graceful cape sleeves conveys a message of high-style distinction.

Cool and comfortable for the young girl is the little jacket-frock to the left. The bright monotone print in triple sheer of bengberg employed for this winsome outfit carries an animated patterning of wee gay monotonies—a perfect complement to youth. The link-button fastening at the waistline accents the modish slowness of this young modern. The pleated frill which collars the jacket also bespeaks a youthful note.

The insistent call of the mode for white accents on dark prints is answered in the swaggy jacketed dress to the right. This model is a bit more grown-up than the one just described which should make it of special interest to the matron. As a matter of fact it is a type which tunes to most any age from teens on. This distinguished ensemble like its companion models in the picture is also made of bengberg triple sheer. It again reminds that the polka dot vogue is still going strong. The huge wide collar and flaring cuffs are of white taffeta.

USE SAILOR COLLAR NOW EVEN ON SHOES

And now they're wearing sailor collars on shoes. Already they've put sailor collars on everything from bathing suits to nightgowns. So now you may literally be nautical from head to foot.

Your gob hat and your middy shirt-waist dress will find their reflection on the toe of your novel sports sandal, which may combine red patent leather and white linen, and undoubtedly will sport a little sailor collar design on the toe.

Shoes must match your costume nowadays not only in fabric and color, but in atmosphere. The dress trimmed with rows of stitching demands a stitched pump to set it off. The suit with pearl buttons has its matching pump, with a button instead of a buckle.

New Fabrics and Colors

Shown in Summer Gloves

Chanut has used both new fabrics and colors to make some of the smartest of summer gloves. Most of them are designed to match a jabot or cravat such as the old-time dandies used to wear, intended to be worn with the same frock. Necktie silk—navy dotted with white and brown splashed with green—fashions jaunty gauntlet gloves worn with ascot cravats. Black and white and red and white checked taffeta gloves have matching scarfs finished with a great bow worn on one side of the throat.

Cellophane Embroidery

Black cellophane embroidery is a favorite trim for white organdie dresses of romantic design.

Huge Red Dots

Red pistilles of enormous size, printed on white chiffon, are replacing dot designs in importance.

IT'S ORGANDIE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

According to the latest dictates of fashion sheer prints are smartest when they have dark backgrounds. Here is one of the prettiest organdie frocks brought out this season. It is black and white, which gives it a Paris look, for smart-dressed French women continue steadfast in their favor for black-and-white. Flame red shoulder flowers supply the dash of color which glorifies the whole scheme of things.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets a young man, Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the railroad station they meet Mrs. Denver, engaged as matron. At the school the group is struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group, which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are really highly artistic wax figures. Haskell explains the unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school.

He began to speak of psychology in an introductory way, his mind still in foreign countries. "And you understand," he said after some preliminary explanations, "that it must always be a relative subject; for the human imagination is plastic, takes impressions from places. The incalculable sadness of pine-hemmed Ravenna with its lost churches and forgotten graves might well enchant Lord Byron but leave the fever-ridden peasant only with a great weariness of marshes from which he could not escape. The old, old half lights of London with the fog rolling in from the Thames, and the black bubble of St. Paul's riding airily—think of their influence on a mind like Charles Lamb's; or the sea caves of Guernsey on Victor Hugo's, and the wind-swept gorgeous heights of Spain on the haughty personality of its grandees."

But he wanted to hear her voice again, and he asked the class questions for no other purpose than to hear her speak.

His heart beat rapidly with a new, enchanting excitement. He had worked so hard all his life that to turn aside into romance would have seemed as futile to him as an excursion into a lovely wood road would be to a traveler hastening to a city in which he had important business.

When the class was dismissed, and she had smiled a little as she passed him, he had sat for a long time staring at his papers and meditating over the desperate limitations of theory. The heart of the universe was a magic which could not be learned from books or weary young teachers, but directly from the bright lining of a cloud, frail, beautiful spring flowers, sunsets, or the profoundly sweet voice of one woman selected from all others by infallible instinct as the voice a man would wish to hear through all his living and at the moment of his dying. "What has got over me?" he said, and rose and put away his books.

In the corridor he met Arthur.

"How did you get on?"

"Very well—and you?"

"Miss Bracebridge rather led the psychology class—she is very pretty, very interesting, don't you think?"

"Not so pretty as Janet Mercer."

Payne breathed a sigh of relief. As if evoked by the words of her name, Janet was coming down the corridor.

"Isn't it quite thrilling to teach in such a school?"

"It is, indeed," Payne said fervently.

"I noticed something rather odd," Arthur began. "My pupils watched the corridor a good deal—kept looking toward the dark hall, and rather apprehensively. And I overheard a conversation between two of them as they were collecting their books. It ran something like this: 'Where does he keep the dummies?'"

"Baldie told father they were in the basement."

"I bet you wouldn't go into the room where they are!"

"I bet I would."

"Baldie says he's afraid of them—she isn't."

"She ought to be afraid of 'em."

"She never knew 'em—she was only six."

"Of course I picked up my ears, but they saw I was listening in, and stopped. They're nice, hearty youngsters—rather hazy about their mathematical attainments."

"I am rather worried about Mrs. Denver," Janet said. "I went to her room again, but she is not there. I hope Mr. Haskell will not overwork her."

He was waiting for them in the lunch room, and his bright, restless eyes searched their faces keenly. "Ah, here you are! Alive, I see!"

The words were trivial, but they jarred upon Arthur. "Why shouldn't we be?"

"Well, I thought the strain of teaching under these rather novel conditions might be hard. Your pupils are most enthusiastic—you will go far with them."

Again the curious note in his voice. As the lunch proceeded the talk drifted to religion. "I often think," he said, "of the old idea that religion and politics must not be mentioned in society—whereas, as I heard a famous man say once, they are the only subjects worth talking about. There must be a religion that swallows up all others; and a policy that dominates all other policies of government. What an extraordinary privilege to be the initiator either of that religion or that policy!"

"Not being Olympians, I am afraid we will none of us have such a privilege."

The eyes of Gordon Haskell grew deep, subtle, secretive; and the flame of fanaticism lighted them. "It is not in cities such experiments in universality are tried out, but amid the violence of nature and in the haunted recesses of the hills. What is your conception of religion, Miss Mercer?"

"I think its essence is allurements, attraction, gentleness; going toward a flame because it warms you. There could be no cruelty, no violence, no bigotry in true religion," Janet ventured.

When lunch was finished, Haskell rose and stood like a brown shadow against the white door of the room. "One would give children an eternal playtime," he said wistfully. "But that they only have when they die. You will be free at four. In your walks you will observe that the east wing, once Doctor Bracebridge's family quarters, is guarded off by a high iron fence. I live there now, and Berenice and her old nurse have the top floor. It is not necessary to visit that part of the academy," he added significantly.

"I hope we may some day see Miss Bracebridge out of study hours," Payne said boldly. The simple words seemed to arouse Haskell's anger, but he said casually, "There's not the slightest objection—if she cares to see you."

To cover up Payne's silence, Janet asked: "May I see Mrs. Denver for a moment?"

"Certainly. If you will go to your room I will send her to you."

Five minutes later she came in—pale, amazed, utterly unlike the little, confident woman who had arrived at Blade. She gathered Janet into her arms hungrily. "Oh, my dear, what kind of a place are we in? I've had such a morning—heaps of linen—but not a soul have I seen. He has the ordering of the meals! He keeps the keys of everything."

"I was worried about you."

"And I about you. Oh, my dear, such gloomy kitchens!"

"Where are they?"

"In the basement at the east wing. He lives on the first floor; Miss Bracebridge and an old country woman named Martha on the top floor. Everything's very damp and dark and sad and silent. The cook's an old woman, the wife of the man who drove us up. The sulky young man assists her; and that great, tall creature is called Baldie."

"Did you speak of the wax figures?"

"No, but I heard the young fellow say to the cook, 'The dummies is back again. Master was mad as a mad bull.'"

"Better not speak of them, Mrs. Denver. Now I must go back to the school room. It is almost two."

CHAPTER III

Four o'clock came quickly. At ten minutes after, Arthur was waiting for her in the hall. She had arrayed herself in a short tweed skirt, a orange jersey and knitted cap. "Now to explore this wild land."

As they walked through the crisp, clear air their normal spirits came back to them, and the moldering academy seemed like an oppressive dream. They made their way around the west wing and skirted the vegetable garden, which stretched toward a grove of oaks; beyond these they saw the gleaming waters of Midnight lake.

A small dock was found; and to one of its posts two rowboats with locked oars were tied. Both bore the lettering, "Property of the Academy."

"Shall we row across to the ravine side?"

"That would be the quickest way to reach the falls."

On the lake, quietly rowing, their perturbed spirits became stilled by the intense and wild loveliness of the scene. The scarred and ragged peaks were already taking on the heliotrope vapors and lights of evening, and the excessive beauty of the landscape was like the crash of an orchestra.

Arthur said little, only too thankful to be away with Janet Mercer—away from that sinister house.

"Look, there's an eagle." She pointed to the great bird winging its flight northward. "He doesn't have to teach in Lostland academy."

"Are you beginning to feel nervous again?"

"Yes—but I intend to put it through."

"Of course we'll put it through."

She liked the plural pronoun. He glanced at her, thinking her beauty was like some happy adventure of the spirit. He could not imagine her growing old or tired or discouraged. Always there would be the light touch, the smile over the irrevocable, the happy confidence of that rare minority who walk the world as if it were an enchanted place. She had dignity, too—that attribute rare in modern women.

"I am very lucky," he said abruptly.

"Aren't we really always in luck if we only knew it?"

"I wonder if Gordon Haskell is lucky."

"I am sure he wants to be. Were your scholars as exemplary as mine?"

"Ah, that reminds me. I have a note in my purse, addressed simply 'The Teacher.' I think this is a good time to read it."

MINING NOTES OF VARIOUS SECTIONS

Such encouraging news has been received from the operations of Taylor Windfall properties in the White-water district, north of Bridge River, that a party of the company's officials has left by airplane to get first hand information regarding the somewhat sensational developments that have taken place there recently.

Revelations made by the diamond drilling operations indicate that the ore body carrying high values in free gold has now been traced down from the surface for more than 350 feet, according to reports, and the drill is still in ore. A crosscut hole is now being driven to determine width.

The nature of the deposit is said to be entirely different from anything in the neighboring Bridge River district as the gold is free milling in a schistose deposit.

Red Mountain Syndicate's property, south-west of Pioneer mine, Bridge River, covering part of the higher ground in that vicinity, was examined last month by Dr. Schofield, and a crew of men is now carrying out the work recommended by him.

So far several good-looking veins have been exposed, one of which, it is said, having been traced for 4000 feet. The syndicate has been financed to date through Gold Star Mines Ltd.

James Marshall, vice-president of Phillips Arm Consolidated Mines Ltd., an old-timer of the Slocan and Boundary districts in West Kootenay, has just returned from a trip to the company's property on Neville Inlet, bringing with him samples of massive ore recently developed on the property.

The main showing consists of a vein outcropping at a point about 350 feet above the sea on a precipitous mountain known as Baresides. A crew has been engaged driving a cross cut from a point about 200 feet below the outcrop in the face of the cliff and dipping into it at about 60 degrees.

Hydraulic and placer miners in the Cariboo are putting in the busiest season in many years, the following being in full swing in the immediate vicinity: Lowhee, Guyet, Trehouse, French Creek, Antler Creek, E. T. Fitzsimmons, Eight Mile, Summit Creek, W. H. Hong on Slough Creek, New Creek, McDougal and Ford on Dragon Creek, with several other smaller individual operations.

Dragon Creek has not yet had a clean-up, but has already picked up on bedrock about $500 in coarse gold, including several $20 nuggets, encountered while moving large boulders. This evidence of rich ground a heavy when the monitor was shut off. With recovery is expected when the clean-up is made.

The premium on gold has been a great incentive to placer miners. They are now getting about 75 per cent more for their gold than they did two years ago, and the general impression hereabouts is that there must be some further increase in gold price soon.

June gross earnings of Alaska Juneau Gold Mining Co. were $389,000, compared with $285,000 a year ago. Six months gross was $2,257,350, compared with $1,604,000 in 1933.

Bear Lake, 19 miles from Barker, is becoming very popular as a rendezvous for fishing and week-end parties. For years it has been a magnet for big-game hunters. One party out fishing this week saw fourteen moose at close range.

Officials of the large mining companies are taking advantage of this resort, and several spend their week-ends there regularly. There is a chain of connecting lakes, and after nearly 100 miles by water a ten-mile trail brings one back to the starting point.

Bride-To-Be Showered

Miss Adeline Pellacani of 452 San Diego avenue, who is to become the bride of Mr. Glenn Cullum of San Francisco on Saturday evening, was guest of honor Wednesday evening of this week at a miscellaneous surprise shower, given at the home of Miss Ethel Dubic of Chattanooga street in San Francisco.

The evening was delightfully spent in playing whist, after which dainty refreshments were served.

The honor guest was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts.

Those who enjoyed the evening included Misses Ethel Dubic, Irene Dubic, Laura Guinn, Edna Main, Adeline Pellacani, Dora White, Margie Dubic, Irene Dubic, Alma Baumeister, Gloria Cullum, Edith Pellacani and Dolores White; Mesdames Carl Haack, Gwen Wedlake, Agnes Baumeister, Veronica Anderson, Ethel Saam and Rose White.

Couple Married at Home

Mr. Clarence W. Turner of Shakes-pease street and Mrs. Agnes O. Johnston of San Francisco were quietly married at their future home on Shakespeare street last week by Rev. Joseph L. Logsdon of Grace Church of the Nazarene.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapman of Bruno street acted as witnesses.

ing division, has started production from its 100 ton mill, according to A. J. Macpherson, trustee, who is now on the ground. Besides milling plant, property has been equipped with saw-mills, 500 foot railway track built on trestle dump cars, cook house, bunk house and other necessary buildings constituting a complete camp. The ore body, a large porphyry dike, is said to be entirely free milling, with values running from traces to high figures. Costs are estimated at around one dollar a ton.

Canadian Rand Gold Mines Ltd., operating about seven miles up McGillivray Creek from McGillivray Falls, is employing a force of twenty-four men, preparing a complete camp. A compressor operated by gasoline power has already been installed and a bunk house, dining room and other camp buildings have been partially completed. Supplies and equipment are leaving daily by pack train for McGillivray Falls.

"Gold dredges have converted placer mining from a scale hit and miss gamble, into an industrial enterprise in which the element of mass production plays an important part," recently declared O. B. Allan, secretary of Fraser River Golds Ltd.

"The modern dredge of the hydraulic elevator type," he said "can handle thousands of yards of gravel a day, while the old time placers could at best only wash three or four yards a day."

"The dredge has a capacity of 10,000 cubic yards of gravel a day. In other words, it can handle approximately the same amount of yardage every twenty-four hours that the primitive method of placer mining would take ten years to treat."

"Because such a large quantity of gravel is taken up each day, operating companies are now able to make profits on gravels carrying only a few cents in gold per cubic yard. The testing of these gravels by Keystone drilling before dredging operations are commenced makes the outcome even more certain before recovery is commenced," he concluded.

Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, while at Seward this week en route to the Pribilof Islands to inspect the seal herds, announced that he would endeavor to interest airplane manufacturers to turn out flivver air planes to supplant dogteam travel in Interior Alaska. The Secretary said President Roosevelt and himself were vitally interested in Alaska's commercial problems and that he would seek first-hand information on the feasibility of the plan during his Alaska trip, during which fisheries and gold, Alaska's greatest resources, would largely occupy his attention.

W. H. CLAY

A Candidate For JUSTICE of the PEACE

It is well known and recognized among lawyers that some of the most intricate and perplexing questions of law arise in the minor courts, such as the Municipal and Justices' Courts of California. The proper solution of such questions of law is of most vital importance to those engaged in litigation to recover their rights or have redress for wrongs. The administration of justice in such courts, as in all courts, should be entrusted only to those whose learning and experience in the law qualifies them for the office.

W. H. Clay, of Daly City, is a candidate for the office of Justice of the Peace of the First Township of San Mateo County at the primary election to be held August 28, 1934. His reputation for honesty and integrity is well known, and if elected he will bring to the office the experience of over twenty-five years active practice of law in all the courts of the State of California, and in the United States District Courts.

ARMY HORSES TO BE SHOWN AT CLUB

U. S. Army riders with their sensational jumpers will compete with civilian teams for first place in the hunters and jumpers division of the San Mateo County National Horse Show, scheduled for August 6 to 12 at the Menlo Circus Club in Atherton. The equine event will bring together more than 400 of the nation's finest show horses, including three and five-gaited saddle horses, roadsters, harness horses and ponies, polo ponies, stock horses, hunters and jumpers and breeding classes of American saddle-bred horses.

The jumping events, always a big part of every national horse show, provide much excitement and many thrills for the spectators as it is not uncommon for a veteran and accomplished rider to "come a cropper" when taking a difficult jump over a water hazard or an especially high barrier.

The army horses, drilled and schooled by army officers are almost letter perfect and can take off with such ease and ability that they seldom tick the top bar, it is declared. They will meet with the famous jumpers costing thousands of dollars from the stables of Mrs. Alma Spreckles Rosekrans of "Runnymede Farm" in Woodside, Mrs. Harold Lane of "Crosswicks Ranch" Gilroy and other outstanding breeding farms for horses of this type. The rivalry between army and civilian riders for the cash awards, trophies and ribbons is expected to be of particular interest to the public, who judge the winners by performance and applaud the "way of going" and style of jumping of each mount.

Major E. G. Cullum of Mineola, New York, considered one of the most outstanding authorities of hunters and jumpers in the country, will judge this division of the show. Major Cullum has done much to perfect the American army teams and make it possible for them to compete with the equestrian teams of other countries, it is said.
